What are third party cookies?

Our website contains cookies issued by third parties that allow them to collect browsing information related to the terminals that visit our websites.

Google Analytics standard audience measurement cookies are used to collect information about the user and to reconstruct their journey on the site.

The so-called "social networks" cookies are collected via application buttons and are likely to identify You, even if You have not used this button, when consulting our site, especially if You are connected to a social network platform.

We invite You to consult the privacy policies of these third parties to learn about the purposes for use and navigation information they can collect through these tools. You can also refuse these cookies by adjusting the respective setting of your browser, as shown below.

Among the third-party cookies, one can find so-called "affiliation" cookies which are cookies related to an affiliation program.

How can You accept or refuse cookies?

You can accept cookies or in some cases choose to disable them at any time. Nevertheless, some cookies are essential to your general navigation. These include cookies related to:

- The shopping cart;
- Identification;
- Authentication;
- Sessions created by a media player;
- Load balancing sessions;
- Solutions for analyzing and measuring the audience;
- Customization of the interface.

You can set your browser to tell You which cookies are on your device and ask You to accept them.

You can also use a platform for managing cookies, sharing cookies and advertising cookies.

How to change my browser settings?

Access this feature via the "Options" or "Preferences" menu of your browser. The modification method is described in the help menu of your browser:
